George Ho (1968- )

George Ho graduated from Harvard University in 1990 with an A.B. degree in Visual and Environmental Studies. After twelve years of living and painting in New York City, he returned to Taiwan in 2004 to establish his art studio here. In addition to showing regularly in private galleries, he also has completed several public art projects, including a 12-meter mural, "The Emissaries," in the lobby of the National Theater. George combines his artwork with the energy healing modalities he studies, aiming for his work to be the medium connecting the viewer with the spaces and consciousness beyond this reality. From the sacred geometries in his earlier works to the current pure energetic abstract compositions, George continues to deliver a penetrating energy of positivity through his work, dynamically turning art into the expression of energy healing for the new age.
